Discretion or Indiscretion

By [illegible]

(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

[illegible] Fairville's citizens were assembled [illegible] of the depot [illegible] nervously [illegible] hited. Special directions had been telegraphed to the porter to suitably decorate two chairs in the parlor car, and upon the arrival of the train at Fairville to give the newly married couple marked attention. The novelty of this arrangement was highly interesting and furnished the whispered speculation for groups and pairs who hurriedly neared with laughter in anticipation of the embarrassment in store for the unsuspecting couple.

"All aboard!" rang out the vibrant voice of the conductor, hardly waiting for the train to come to a stop.

With a mad rush for the platform of the train the passengers jostled and stumbled in heedless disregard, and in the midst of a shower of rice [illegible] well-wishes the last passengers took their share of the [illegible] missiles good naturedly, [illegible] coaches.

Inadvertently the bride and groom followed close in the wake of a young [illegible] the parlor car. The grimning face of the porter as the door opened met with a speedy retreat, and the bride wheeled about and entered the second coach, [illegible] and of the coach and his [illegible] respecting their newly acquired relationship.

The face of the porter broadened with a radiant smile as he ostentatiously ushered the [illegible] into the decorated chairs, leaving unmistakable evidence of premeditated design.

The young woman's preoccupation in structing with a [illegible] was [illegible] easier on novelty was [illegible] the game.

"An unusually mirthful lot of passengers tonight," commented the woman, [illegible] collectively.

[illegible] eyes [illegible] and [illegible] pinned to the back of the [illegible] son's chair.

"Mr. Reed!" alarmingly her face flushed scarlet, "what can we do? They are—that is—they think we are the bride and groom."

"But we are not, are we?" replied the man indifferently.

"But—"

"Call me Don," he interrupted, as he leaned forward touched by her appeal, "we can do but one thing."

"What?"

"Play the game. Look like a [illegible] bride, and [illegible] will mine." His enthusiasm increased as he continued. Her questioning look was met by [illegible] accumulate our embarrassment, besides, who would believe us [illegible] the bride and groom are unoubtedly in the rear coach happy in their reasonable age and relishing in the thought of our embarrassment," he contended secretly pleased with the arrangement.

"But, Mr.—"

"Married people call each other by their given names, I believe," he interrupted dryly.

"Oh, this is horrid!" she exclaimed.

Minerva decided that to reconcile her predicament with the proper maintenance of her dignity as [illegible] was to play the model bride.

"Do you [illegible]," he [illegible] his watch and refolding [illegible] without looking at it, "where the custom of rice throwing originated?"

"In China, I suppose, among the heathen," then added: "Is the game too strenuous?"

"No, not too strenuous," he [illegible] "I was wishing our destination was New York, and not Evanston."

"Why not Japan, Don, or Rome," she laughed [illegible]

"Or a trip around the world," he [illegible]

"On two hours' acquaintance?"

"I have known you several years," he ventured, looking into her eyes.

"My memory fails me on that point," she replied, "my first recollection of meeting dates back less than two hours; I believe we were introduced at Mrs. Moulton's dinner party today. As you see Mr. Don, I must quarrel with you on that point."

"I did not mean to quarrel with you; a bride and groom should not quarrel, at least not till their honeymoon is over. You are original, and that is refreshing."

"You are [illegible]," he almost [illegible] at her.

"Don," she spoke the name naturally, "tell me something about yourself."

"Some other time when we are not playing," he answered.

"But," she objected, "there may be no other time."

"There will be," with confidence, "now that I have found you, I am going to surrender you so easily."

"I finish in Evanston," she [illegible] uttered.

"So am I," he answered.

"My friends, what will they think of me to find me escorted by a stranger?"

"No, [illegible] you must have one in the car. [illegible] game and here."

"Hang your friends," almost impulsively, "I beg your pardon, my [illegible]."

"Of course, I have no objections to your going to your home and if you wish to call to-morrow evening, I will introduce you to my people."

"Evanston," was the muffled sound heard from the other end of the coach, and several passengers moved towards the door passing the bride and groom-apparent with a curious smile.

"Then to-morrow," she smiled, as she [illegible] for a moment. [illegible] truth which he read in the glance she gave him, his heart stopped beating, and he felt a irresistible desire to [illegible] her in his arms and shower [illegible] and lips with the burning kisses of his passionate love.

[illegible] Young man waited at a respectful distance in a [illegible] his companion's friends carry her away.

[illegible] the last passenger [illegible] to her side with a deep sense of satisfaction.

"Your friends didn't come, Minerva," he said.

"So I see," she replied almost coldly. "You forget the game is over. I am no longer Minerva."

"[illegible] be questioned, disregarding [illegible]

"That will not be necessary, my home is only two squares away. I intend to walk. You may carry my suitcase if you will."

They had reached the house, and were standing near a [illegible] of the veranda. The night was perfect. Peculiar thrills shot through him as their eyes quickly met in mutual understanding. The psychological moment was at hand.

"[illegible] you [illegible] caressingly.

"I seem to have no choice," she replied almost timidly.

"Minerva," and he took both her hands in his, "I love you. I have loved you ever since you and my [illegible] were at [illegible] I wanted to [illegible] you then, but [illegible] would [illegible]."

"Why, I never saw you [illegible] is four years ago. Now I am back home again to remain. I had little hopes of finding you here." Then fervently, and almost reverently: "I love you more than I can tell in words, will you give me a chance?" He felt her hands trembling in his.

She [illegible] reply, with [illegible] in her voice, and looked up into his eyes as he drew her to him.

"Do you know why your sister would not let us meet four years ago?" [illegible] "Well, I will tell you. I saw you often on the campus at Harvard. I saw you at Radcliff when you visited your sister—I—was in love with you then, that [illegible] your sister called [illegible] she would [illegible] meet. She said you would never care for me. She was [illegible] and wise, so I reluctantly obeyed."

He held her in his arms now, her face close to his, looking deep into the eyes as they sparkled with the kindling fire of love.

"When do we have our honeymoon?" he whispered.

"When we are both ready," she answered, then added cautiously: "Discretion, you know, is the better part of indiscretion."

MAKING IT EASY FOR HIM.

Hibernian Had Much Consideration for His Creditor.

"One of the quecrest bits of Irish wit I ever heard," said a real estate agent, "was perpetrated by a Hibernian friend of mine some years ago.

"He owed one of my clients $400, and been owing it for a long time. The man at last got tired waiting and insisted on having his money. The [illegible] matter [illegible] bookkeeper [illegible] ready to tear out his hair by the roots, the business [illegible] to settle the matter, as he said, by giving a note, and, after many objections, the creditor finally agreed.

"They asked one of my clerks to draw up the note, but when he started to do so the debtor insisted that instead of one note for $400 at 90 days, four notes for $100 each should be made out, at 30, 60, 90 and 120 days.

"The creditor kicked again, but the Irishman was determined, and finally the notes were made out and [illegible] the creditor put them in his pocketbook and went away.

"Just he had gone, I said to the man, whom I knew very well: 'Tim, why did you want to give that man four notes instead of one for the $400?' You know you had no idea of paying that money, anyhow.'

"'Wasn't it out of consideration for him I did it?' said Tim. 'Sure, it would be a good deal easier and cheaper for him to lose $100 at a time than to lose $400 at once,' and Tim marched out congratulating himself on his consideration."

Unhappiness in Roguery.

I never knew a rogue who was unhappy.—Junius.

THE TOMB OF CHRIST.

IT HAS BEEN A BATTLEFIELD FOR CENTURIES.

[illegible] Monks Continue to Hold Over [illegible]

—Arrangements Made with the Sultan.

[illegible] world where noise of strife should be forever hushed, and only sounds of worship be heard, men met in bloody battle recently. Crucifixes and censers were the weapons, Franciscian and Armenian monks were the combatants, and the scene of the struggle was the tomb of Christ.

For a brief time the battlefield of the crusades echoed again to the sound of clashing arms, the groans of the wounded, the cheers of the victors. But this was not a battle of believer against unbeliever, heathen versus Christian. The combatants were monks sworn to teach the doctrines of the Prince of Peace.

The bone of contention is a desire to control the sainted sepulcher. Was this ambition [illegible] and [illegible] of the same desire [illegible] order and the Armenian branch cleaved at each other's throats.

[illegible] Sweep off the Greeks and the Greeks though they had little part in erecting the tomb of Christ, under Christian control, have profited so skillfully by the quarrels of France with Turkey that they have [illegible] themselves with the Sultan till he is [illegible]

In this last battle one Franciscan was [illegible] smashed in with a heavy [illegible] and a number of the combatants went to hospitals for treatment. So frequent have the quarrels [illegible] that other [illegible] intervene.

[illegible] and Italian consuls have at times been dragged into the controversies that resulted from [illegible] for the Sultan [illegible] by other [illegible] 45 minutes, basting with a brown sauce. Garnish with quarters [illegible] cooked without sugar.

Remarkably Comfortable.

Do not roll the paste out too [illegible] for it will be dry and tasteless when [illegible]

When preserves are put into pies do not cover with a crust, but make a lattice effect with strips of dough.

Remember to flour the board and rolling pin well before rolling out the paste.

Unripe fruit should first be cooked and sweetened, or too long baking will make the crust tough.

Mix pie dough with cold water, roll the dough on a marble or cold tin slab.

Butter makes a rich pie dough, but the crust is never so nice as when lard is used.

It's Good to Know

[illegible] can make a [illegible] ing water.

That salt dissolves [illegible] will often remove grease spots from clothing.

That two potatoes grated in a basin of water will give better results that soap in washing delicate flannel and woolen goods, ribbons, etc.

That piano keys can be cleaned, as can any old ivory, by being rubbed with muslin dipped in alcohol.

That a little thin cold starch rubbed over windows and mirrors and then wiped off with a soft cloth is an easy way of producing most shining results.

Pineapple Muffins.

[illegible] ally one teacup of [illegible] milk and one-third cup of melted butter. Thicken this with one (sifted) quart of flour in which has been mixed three teaspoons of baking powder, a heaping tablespoon of sugar and a teaspoon of salt. When thoroughly beaten add one cup of grated pineapple and bake until quite done (which will be in about half an hour) in hot, greased muffin rings, a little more [illegible]

[illegible] Over the spot [illegible] the cross was placed a chapel was erected, and [illegible] Jerusalem by Helena and placed under [illegible] by Constantine over the place of Christ's burial.

[illegible] of these buildings, par[illegible] a place of pilgrimage such as it remained to this day. For 300 peaceful years the cross remained at the [illegible] shiping songs and prayers of the faithful rosounded over the sacred stones.

In 614 warfare and slaughter came [illegible] the holy spot. Jerusalem was stormed by the Persian king Chos-

Newly [illegible] Tomb of Christ.

[illegible] II. The Christians made their [illegible] defense at the door of the church, but were defeated, and the [illegible] heathen. Fourteen years later, Emperor Heraclius regained possession of the tomb for the Christian [illegible]

Even the end of the wars between the [illegible] and the Christians [illegible] 1832. The [illegible] recovered it in 1517 by the valor of Sultan Selim, the son of this leader, Soliman, built the wall that now surrounds the city.

At last, being unable to occupy the [illegible] agreement with the sultan by which they ceded his right to control, but got in return permission to worship there, and to have the sacred basilica in charge of Christian priests.

But even this has not brought peace to the tomb, and strife and hatred still reign where only love and worship should be.

SAVES FORTUNE FROM WAGES

Man Lays By $10,000 from Meager Income.

Boston.—Octave Girard of [illegible] Mass., consists of [illegible] ried people, who had a will to [illegible] own lives and who had trials enough of their own to face without [illegible] folk. He resolved that no one need take care of him in his old age. He hustled to the United States with this [illegible] in Worcester, Mass., with only ten cents. He walked to Grafton, a distance of 16 miles, to get a job, and worked for a shoemaker for several years. Then he shipped on a whaling vessel and went around the world. When he returned he married a former sweetheart in Canada and settled down to save money. He saved a certain portion of his wages, no matter whether they increased or diminished, and when some of the children grew large enough to go to work they added to his savings by paying board money. [illegible] Girard aided greatly in buying raw wool, washing it, carding it and spinning it into cloth for their clothes, instead of buying material from the stores. She also knew where and how to buy provisions, and a carefully tended market garden lessened the [illegible]

OCTAVE GIRARD.

(He Saved $10,000 Out of Wages of $1.25 a Day.)

Mr. Girard has made only one investment, but that was a successful one. He bought a piece of property for $900 and sold it a few years later for $1,500, but he [illegible] to make money [illegible] of systematic saving.

Pertinent Query.

[illegible] elderly gentleman with the big watch chain [illegible] laid the foundation of my fortune by saving car fares."

"Indeed!" rejoined the flippant youth. "By the way, how long did you act in the capacity of street car conductor?"—Chicago Daily News.

Manuscript of "Scots Wha Hae" has been sold for $[illegible] Burns missed a fortune by not being able to reach the publisher at that rate.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Popping the Hypothetical Question.

"Now let us suppose," said Mr. Quigley, as Miss Richly smothered a yawn and glanced covertly at the clock, "that you [illegible] I will call P. D. Q., had been for two years paying devoted attention to a charming young woman, whom we will designate as [illegible] the English nobleman, and languish of mind because malicious gossips had [illegible] that the fortune of himself, M. E. R., was the supreme attraction in his [illegible] ambitious P. D. Q. continued to worship at the shrine of this beauteous creature, lavishing upon her entertainments to the limit of his unfortunate slender purse, and all the time dreaming of the day, or rather of the evening, when she would say 'yes,' painting mental pictures of a home with this lovely woman, whom he had come to regard as the light of his eyes; planning the brilliant future that would be his with the financial aid that his dear wife would bring him; [illegible] this P. D. Q., who is not a bad sort, even if [illegible] jealous creature, do say unexplainable [illegible] heart at the feet of M. E. R., and beg that she henceforth pass through life by his side—what would you say to this adoring P. D. Q.?"

"I would say," replied Miss Richly, sleepily, "I saw funnier a newspaper [illegible] report of the Thaw trial, there he was insane."

New Metal Called Momel.

A new metal called momel, which is expected to cause something of a stir in the industrial world, is being produced at the works of the Canadian Mining company at Sudbury, Ont.

It consists of a compound of copper, nickel, iron and one or two other minerals which are found in the district, and its importance lies in the fact that it is much less costly than nickel, is less liable to rust and will serve all the purposes that are served by that metal in the industrial world.

The new metal is said to be of equal ductile strength with nickel and to possess all its other essential qualities, but it is not claimed that it would serve the purposes of nickel steel, which is [illegible] plate

SOME GOOD HOME REMEDIES.

Water Cloths as a Poultice—Proper Treatment of Burns.

[illegible] in hot water [illegible] and have few equals in [illegible] pain. Cloths which [illegible] hot water and then are [illegible] hot water bottle will [illegible] all the efficacy of those freshly [illegible] and rung out, and will retain [illegible] is a good thing to bear in mind when it is difficult to change cloths [illegible] wherever attendants [illegible]

One of the most healing of applications in the case of bad burns is made from raw potato without adding anything to it. Grate it freshly every time the poultice is to be changed, and, after putting it thickly on a cloth, [illegible] over the burns. The heat of the burn will [illegible] like magic, leaving a coolness which, however, dries rapidly. It should be renewed as fast as the juice of the vegetable evaporates. Burns treated in this way [illegible] leave a scar, no matter how severe they have been.

As usually made, the flaxseed poultice is [illegible] that it should not be a [illegible] welcome. One way of [illegible] than is to scald the [illegible] the boiling [illegible] stain. [illegible] the poultice mustard in small proportions [illegible] well made poultice should be soft and moist, but not wet and hot.

Pork Tenderloin Stuffed.

Pork tenderloin stuffed is really a [illegible] If one is inclined to grumble at the price of [illegible] loin at 25 or 30 cents a pound, remember that there is not an ounce lost. It is all meat, and [illegible] meat, too. Here is a recipe: Four large pork tenderloins, half a pound of fat pork, one cup of cracker crumbs, [illegible] of sage, salt and pepper [illegible] Make a deep [illegible] in each tenderloin and with a larding needle lard every one, fill each [illegible] with the stuffing, sew them up, place them in [illegible] 45 minutes, basting with a brown sauce. Garnish with quarters [illegible] cooked without sugar.

Remarkably Comfortable.

Do not roll the paste out too [illegible] for it will be dry and tasteless when [illegible]

When preserves are put into pies do not cover with a crust, but make a lattice effect with strips of dough.

Remember to flour the board and rolling pin well before rolling out the paste.

Unripe fruit should first be cooked and sweetened, or too long baking will make the crust tough.

Mix pie dough with cold water, roll the dough on a marble or cold tin slab.

Butter makes a rich pie dough, but the crust is never so nice as when lard is used.

It's Good to Know

[illegible] can make a [illegible] ing water.

That salt dissolves [illegible] will often remove grease spots from clothing.

That two potatoes grated in a basin of water will give better results that soap in washing delicate flannel and woolen goods, ribbons, etc.

That piano keys can be cleaned, as can any old ivory, by being rubbed with muslin dipped in alcohol.

That a little thin cold starch rubbed over windows and mirrors and then wiped off with a soft cloth is an easy way of producing most shining results.

Pineapple Muffins.

[illegible] ally one teacup of [illegible] milk and one-third cup of melted butter. Thicken this with one (sifted) quart of flour in which has been mixed three teaspoons of baking powder, a heaping tablespoon of sugar and a teaspoon of salt. When thoroughly beaten add one cup of grated pineapple and bake until quite done (which will be in about half an hour) in hot, greased muffin rings, a little more [illegible]

How Women Has Elevated the Stage

By Julia Marlowe.

Recounting the Hard Struggles of Famous Actresses to Win Recognition—Mrs. Drew's Influence—Woman's Achievement—An Actress Has Advanced the Cause of Women.

(Copyright by J. R. [illegible])

(Julia Marlowe, though regarded as an American actress, was born in the lake country of England. She was but a child of four years when her family removed to a farm in Kansas. At 12 years of age she joined a juvenile "Pinafore" company and soon attracted attention by her clever acting and her rich, clear voice. Other engagements followed; then she retired from the stage and studied dramatic art for three years. Reappearing as Parthenia in "Ingomar" at the Bijou theater [illegible] instant recognition [illegible] of various [illegible] on the [illegible] world at large of the importance of their hard-won position and their beneficent influence upon dramatic art. I am speaking now of the past. Happily at the present stage of dramatic [illegible] peared in [illegible] representations, we find her entrance [illegible] an era [illegible] woman's appearance upon the stage. [illegible] play was Shakespeare's "Othello," and the Desdemona was played by a woman. There has been considerable doubt as to [illegible] belongs. Some [illegible] is that Mar[illegible] immortality. We have Pepys [illegible] er's "Beggar's [illegible]

Their early appearances were received with great disfavor. Dr. Doran tells us that the writers of the time denounced the first actresses as "unwomanish and graceless"—not meaning that they were ungainly and unfeminine, but that play-acting in itself was below their dignity. "Glad I am to say," remarked Thomas Brand, speaking of these actresses, "that they were hissed, hooted and pippin-pelted from the stage, so that I do not think they will soon be ready to try the same again."

Notwithstanding the marked disfavor with which they were first received, [illegible] serious-minded persons could not fail to see [illegible] would appear that immediately upon this important progressive step in artistic need for woman's appearance must have been generally felt.

We read that soon afterward actresses were in great demand. It was found that they not only increased the popularity of the theaters in which they performed, but that their cooperation was indispensable to the proper presentation of any play. They made possible a fullness and a beauty of interpretation which had not been dreamed of before.

Take for a single example the women of Shakespeare. They stand as vivid types of truth and beauty. They are so alive with the warmth of femininity that their [illegible] than women is in itself a monstrous sacrilege. A play performed by men can hardly be imagined to-day and the wonder is that such an absurdity ever existed.

The realization of the necessity of woman's cooperation with [illegible] was so [illegible] ton that when in 1674 "Calista" was performed at court the actress was chosen as instructress to the princesses Mary and Anne, and much of the subsequent graceful elocution and dignity of [illegible] of these ladies was accredited to Mrs. Betterton. Perhaps no finer compliment was ever paid to a woman in any walk of life than she received, for we read of her that in company with her distinguished husband [illegible] the dignifying place of "charity, hospitality and dignity."

[illegible] monument of [illegible] herself in [illegible] of the stage! To those whose souls are filled with sacred reverence for creative genius what wealth of delight in looking back upon the dazzling [illegible] of the theater when the [illegible] of Mrs. Betterton, Nell Gwynne, Oldfield, Nance Oldfield, Siddons, [illegible] lately, Rachel, Ristori, Fanny Kemble, [illegible] Adelaide Neilson and a host of others stand forth as irrefutable proofs of [illegible] and importance of woman's work in this [illegible] artistic [illegible]

Courage and perseverance have been woman's battle cry since the year 1660. What greater instance of these qualities is to be found in all history than the grim, sad experience of the [illegible] Rachel, who when a wretched child traveled in poverty, [illegible] and cold from one small European town to another, and who in order to possess a copy of Racine's plays was obliged, through trudging through mud and rain, to pawn her umbrella for the pitiful sum of 20 sous.

The history of Charlotte Cushman is well known to make a review of her untiring perseverance necessary. The heart-rending episodes of her life [illegible] of others, [illegible] to influence managers to give her the opportunity of expressing the genius [illegible] one of the most [illegible] changes in the history of woman. Consider, too, [illegible] who besides her valuable services in the dramatic field, took upon herself the entire charge of the hospital department of Port Royal, S. C. She lives in memory to us as the blessed name of Florence Nightingale does to the English. [illegible] of [illegible] for such examples. [illegible] of Miss Clara Morris and their full and lasting artistic victories are well known to all who have watched with [illegible] the lives of a [illegible]

It is often stated that woman is lacking in the faculty of creative genius, and, indeed, that in this particular, by contrast with man, she is decidedly inferior. This is perhaps a reasonable conclusion in view of her history. But it is not so [illegible] consider her dramatic work.

It is by no means a new thought [illegible] tional. Of course, it is not meant by [illegible] woman [illegible] surely fair to assume that to man belongs the power of intellectuality, and to woman the emotional quality. Does it not seem, therefore, that the very possession by nature of this latter quality, which certainly is an absolute necessity in dramatic art, has made her inherently fitted for dramatic achievement?

Mr. Ruskin, in speaking of the necessary qualities that go to form great artists, says: "First, sensibility and tenderness; second, imagination, and third, industry." Woman's nature is peculiarly alive to all of these conditions. It is then no wonder that women on the stage have accomplished [illegible] and will accomplish [illegible] such women as [illegible] Terry, Duse [illegible] continue through inspiration to show their genius to the world.

Woman's work in literature with few exceptions has been denied any claim to greatness. In music and in other arts she is admitted to have shown no [illegible] creative power. But her place upon the stage is as absolutely [illegible] as [illegible] having thus secured for herself an eminent position in the drama the actress has advanced the whole cause of woman, since every individual triumph raises the estimation in which the intellectual [illegible] of a whole class are held. Woman is better understood [illegible] has been faithful [illegible] is more highly regarded because of her ability to make that [illegible] And that portrayal has, I feel, a powerful moral influence in an educational sense.

I thoroughly believe that it is the duty of mothers to [illegible] a serious consideration for the better forms of dramatic literature and of [illegible] Let them [illegible] combining a means for intellectual culture and artistic suggestion, presented in an attractive and inspiring manner.

That woman is capable of arduous effort and untiring devotion has been [illegible] demonstrated by her work on the stage. She has [illegible] to elevate the drama to its [illegible] educational forces of life. She has done to make true what Morley says: "At the [illegible] doors, then, we may say to the doubting, enter boldly, for here, too, are the gods."

Pr[illegible]

[illegible]ply [illegible] visible sign that baby's [illegible] are [illegible] gratifully enough.

[illegible] of [illegible] is [illegible]

Scott's Emulsion [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Dr. Pierce believes that our American forests [illegible] for [illegible] by his "Golden Medical Discovery" [illegible] has proved itself [illegible] stomach [illegible] and built for this purpose [illegible] of [illegible] appliances [illegible] are [illegible] and all [illegible] full [illegible] of [illegible] Stills [illegible]

[illegible] many peculiar affections, weaknesses and distressing derangements, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, as is amply attested by thousands of unsolicited testimonials contributed by grateful patients who have been cured by it of catarrhal pelvic drains, painful periods, irregularities, prolapsus and other displacements caused by weakness, ulceration of uterus and kindred affections, often after many other advertised [illegible] had physicians had failed.

Both the [illegible] are wholly made up from [illegible] their manufacture [illegible] they are [illegible] skilled [illegible] phy[illegible] aid of [illegible] appliances [illegible] are [illegible] and [illegible] for this purpose [illegible] full [illegible] of [illegible] Stills [illegible]

WHY MARK DIDN'T TALK.

August Personage at the Table Had a Monopoly of It.

A couple of days ago a gentleman called [illegible] me with a message from the German emperor. The wording of the message was:

"[illegible] Mr. Clemens my kind regards. Ask him if he remembers that dinner, and ask him [illegible] didn't do any talking."

Why, how could I talk when he was talking? He "held the age," as the poker-clergy say, and two can't talk at the same time with good effect. It reminds me of the man who was reproaching a friend, who said:

"I think it a shame that you have not spoken to your wife for 15 years. How do you justify it?"

"I didn't want to interrupt her."

If the emperor had been at my table I would not have suffered from my silence, I would only have suffered from the sorrows of his own solitude. If I were not too [illegible] to talk and introduce the other [illegible] of my own [illegible] which tallies with the etiquette [illegible] at other men's tables. I would say: "Invite me again, your majesty, and give me a chance," then I would courteously [illegible] talking myself. [illegible] Or his kind [illegible] have it and [illegible] and to express my sincere [illegible] of its sentiments.—From Mark Twain's Autobiography in the North [illegible]

A Reason for Keeping It.

He leaned over her tenderly.

"[illegible] your hand," he sighed.

"Thank you, but I will keep it for myself," she answered.

For she was winning everything in sight at bridge.—Baltimore [illegible]

Innumerable [illegible] struggling poet [illegible] a bottle of ink [illegible] cents.

Prejudice is gold [illegible] for a [illegible]